The poets of antiquity celebrated magnifiently the solomn games in which the various peoples of Greece came to dispute the prize of running. What would they say to day if they witnessed these Olympian contests of the entire world, where all the nations, competing by intelligence, seem to dush forward, all at the same ime, in the career of infinite progress towards antideal which is ever approached, but never attained. (Lond applause.)

From all points of the earth the representatives of Science, Arts, and Manufactures have hastened to assemble together, and it may be said that peoples and kings have come to honor the efforts of labor, and by their presence crown bem with an idea of conciliation and peace. In fact, in these great meetings, which appear to have only for their object material interests, there is always a moral thought which is evolved from the competition of intelligences -that of concord and civilisation. Nations, in drawing nearer together, learn to know and esteem each other; hate becomes extinguished, and this truth becomes more and more accredited, that the prosperity of each country contributes to that of all. (Approbation). The Exhibition of 1867 may justly be called Iniversal; for it unites the elements of all the riches of the globe, by the side of the latest versal: for, by the side of the wonders which luxury produces for some, it has paid the deepest attention to what the necessities of the greatest number require.
